Content

The Pastoral Letters (1 & 2 Timothy and Titus) have been under debate for two centuries, in particular the question of authorship and dating. How do these letters relate to the other Pauline letters? The Pastoral Letters abound with instructions and exhortations about sound doctrine, leadership and church order. This raises several interesting historical and hermeneutically questions: Should the Pastoral Letters be understood as an early church manual? Are these letters representative for the whole early church? Or should they be understood as typical ad hoc-letters? If so, what does this mean for the application of these letters today?

The course covers the following areas: The Pastoral Letters in modern research, the socio-historical setting of the letters, the theology and ethics of the letters, and authority and leadership structures in the Pastoral letters. Hermeneutical issues will also be discussed, particularly the issue of women in leadership.
